MARKET COMMENTARY

Global markets in September lived up to their reputation of being the only month over the last 100 years to post negative average returns. In US dollars, the MSCI world index fell -4.28%. This marks a continuation of equity declines we have seen building from early summer. The 'magnificent 7' tech stocks have continued to decline in recent weeks, with hawkish rhetoric from the Fed over a continuation of rate hikes. Data releases across the globe were mixed; In the US, the ISM manufacturing index rose to 49, with retail sales and industrial production levels rising. Core inflation declined to 4.3%, whilst high energy prices bolstered headline CPI, up 50bp to 3.7%. Purchasing Managers Indices in the eurozone remain in contractionary territory, at 47.2 in Europe, and 48.5 in the UK. Energy was the only sector of the S&P index to post positive returns, up 2.63% in USD; crude prices have risen 28% on the quarter, with energy equities coming into the month with attractive valuations. OPEC supply cuts and dwindling strategic reserves continue to tighten. Uranium and uranium equities posted an exceptional month, as imbalances deepened, with price forecasts rising across analysts. The UK fared well, with the FTSE 100 index up 2.29% in GBP, due primarily to this large tilt towards energy. Broader commodities fared worse, with the Bloomberg commodity index down 1.12% in USD, despite higher oil prices. Core inflation continues to ease across Europe and the UK, but the Bank of England held at 5.25%, to the surprise of market participants. Globally, bond markets fell with the Bloomberg Global Aggregate GBP hedged index down -1.82% during the month. In currency markets, the US dollar index continued its upward charge, posting an 11-week streak of gains, reaching fresh 2023 highs. The UK pound continues to struggle reaching a 6-month low of 1.21 versus the US dollar.
